Along the way

From the village of Sea Palling, the Coast Path follows the landward side of a dune ridge that characterises much of the stretch north of Great Yarmouth. This section of trail winds through grassland and scrub, as well as shady thickets of trees. The latter are popular with birdwatchers, especially during the winter when these offer birds shelter from the cold wind.

Rising briefly from the toe of the dunes at Poplar Farm, the route offers far-reaching views inland and along the coast where a number of churches can be seen, as well as Happisburgh's famous lighthouse, before dipping down once more to follow a well-trodden path between tall sand dunes and grazing marsh. Here, the route passes the much loved grey seal colony, which draws thousands of visitors each winter when the seals come ashore to breed. From here, the route soon arrives at the Winterton-Horsey SSSI, an internationally significant site home to dragonflies, rare butterflies, the natterjack toad and a little tern colony.

At Winterton Ness, the path takes to the dunes, for panoramic views over land and sea. After passing the village of Winterton-on-Sea itself, at around the walk's halfway point, the path enters 'The Valley,' a long meadow bordered by ferns. With views along its length, it's another great place for birdwatching, with raptors often seen hunting above.

Onto the beaches of Hemsby, California and Scratby, sandstone cliffs replace the dunes found elsewhere, adding an extra degree of separation from the villages above. In the autumn and winter, you may well find that you have this whole stretch of beach to yourself, a serene landscape of sea and sand. At higher tides, an alternative route can be found from Hemsby to California, and is waymarked from both sides.
