Along the way

From the village of Sea Palling, the Coast Path follows the landward side of a dune ridge that characterises much of the stretch north of Great Yarmouth. This section of trail winds through grassland and scrub, as well as shady thickets of trees. The latter are popular with birdwatchers, especially during the winter when these offer birds shelter from the cold wind. In the summer months, visitors might spot a number of reptiles in the area, basking in the sun or skittering away into the grass. Common lizards are numerous, but more rarely there's a chance of seeing an adder. The snake's characteristic zig-zag pattern and vivid colouration are a magnificent sight. Though venomous, the snakes are shy creatures, and people are usually only bitten in attempts to catch or handle them. It goes without saying that one should not attempt to catch or handle them.

Rising briefly from the toe of the dunes at around the halfway point, the route offers far-reaching views inland and along the coast where a number of churches can be seen, as well as Happisburgh's famous lighthouse.
